COMMENTARY

The US capital markets have been dealing with a number of fundamental factors over the past quarter. Economic activity seems to have continued on a positive trajectory, though only moderately so. Industrial production continued its recent recovery after a negative trend over the preceding two calendar years. The Dollar currency weakened by over 4% since the end of the first quarter. Company results were generally accelerating, delivering well above consensus expectations. Inflation (and future inflation expectations) continued drifting lower. The Federal Reserve took the next step in their tightening process and increased their target rate by 0.25% in the middle of June. Interest rates drifted lower along with inflation, but a turnaround was triggered late in June by the Fed's action.

Many pundits are currently nervous about equity markets, predominantly because of the summer season, the strong performance for the year thus far and the perceived high earnings valuations. Whilst the combination of the fundamental factors mentioned in the first paragraph are in general constructive towards equity investing, it may be that potentially higher interest rates again cause new investor uncertainty and some volatility.

Rising interest rates have historically mostly been constructive towards equity performance (because of a supportive economic environment). In our view, ten year US rates have to increase by more than 1% over the coming year or so for the bond market to fundamentally become a competitive asset class. While inflation expectations remain to be below 2% we do not currently foresee such an imminent increase.

Amongst all the US economic indicators we follow, only auto sales has an amber light. Against this, the sales of light trucks are still growing handsomely. We do not have information indicating a looming US recession, and therefore for imminent risk of a structural break in share prices. It is much more difficult to foresee a short term tactical adjustment.

RISK FACTORS

Stonehage Fleming Global Best Ideas Equity Fund (the "Fund") is an equity fund. Investors should be willing and able to assume the risks of equity investing in particular, fluctuations in market price, adverse issuer or market information and the fact that equity securities rank below other corporate securities, including debt securities, in right of payment in the event of issuer insolvency. The value of the Fund's portfolio changes daily and can be affected by changes in currencies, interest rates, general market conditions and other political, social and economic developments, as well as specific matters relating to the companies in whose securities the Fund invests. The Fund may hold a relatively small number of stocks as compared to many other funds. This may make the Fund's performance more volatile than would be the case if it had a more diversified investment portfolio.

Changes in the rates of exchange between currencies may cause the value of investments to go up or down in the reporting currency. In general, underlying investments denominated in foreign currency are not hedged back into the reporting currency. Among the factors that may influence currency values are trade balances, the levels of short-term interest rates, differences in relative values of similar assets in different currencies, long-term opportunities for investment and capital appreciation and political developments. Values may also be affected by developments relating to controls and restrictions on foreign currency remittance of proceeds of investments in a non-sterling jurisdiction.

All investments risk the loss of capital. No guarantee or representation is made that the Fund will achieve its investment objective. The value of investments may go down as well as up and the distributions can also go down or up and you may not receive back the full value of your initial investment. The risks outlined here are some of the more specific risks applicable to investment in the Fund and investors' attention is drawn to Appendix II of the Prospectus which provides more information on the types of risk factors investors should consider.

Whilst every effort is made to provide investors with accurate and up to date information, some of the information may be rendered inaccurate by changes in applicable laws and regulations. For example, the levels and bases of taxation may change. No information in this document should be interpreted as investment advice. If you feel unsure about the suitability of this investment for you, please consult with a professional financial adviser.
