PORTFOLIO MANAGER MONTHLY COMMENT

2016 will likely be remembered as a year of the unexpected, with the outcome of the UK referendum and the US presidential elections taking investors by surprise. Domestically, politics and manoeuvring within the ruling party continued to dominate headlines with economic growth and consumer sentiment remaining lacklustre. The country managed to earn a reprieve from a downgrade to 'junk' by the rating agencies although this may prove to be temporary unless improved economic growth and political stability become evident in 2017. The JSE (and major global equity markets) had one of the worst starts to the year on record, as global recessionary fears and a slumping oil price weighed on markets. Although investor sentiment did improve over the year, equity markets remained extremely volatile with positive returns concentrated in certain sectors and companies.

The JSE All Share Index (with dividends included) managed to deliver a positive return of 2.6% for the calendar year. With dividends excluded, the All Share Index declined by 0.1%.

Looking ahead to 2017, whilst the US interest rate hiking cycle adds uncertainty, global interest rates look set to remain at historically low levels providing support for equity markets. The global rotation out of 'quality' companies (listed beverage, tobacco and consumer staple companies being great examples) into more cyclical sectors should normalize. The appeal of well managed companies at reasonable valuations that can consistently grow earnings and dividends will never fall away completely.

The SA economy could well have troughed in 2016, and coming off a low base, aided by improved commodity prices and moderating inflation we could well see a modest improvement in economic activity in 2017. In addition to the domestic economy, there are signs of improvement in the economies of a number of key emerging markets.

After the surprises and weakness experienced across a number of our core holdings in 2016, valuation levels are now at far more attractive levels than they were at the start of the year. Despite the ever-present known and unknown risks, looking ahead into 2017 we believe there is reason for a fair degree of optimism for portfolio returns.
